

First-Author Review Award

The GSBS Immunology Program has established an award program to help encourage authorship among graduate students. A $250 award will be given to students who successfully publish a first-author review article. The goal of this new award program is to help shape the student's research career by strengthening the student's training, enhancing their curriculum vita, and expanding their external recognition.

Eligibility

Students can apply for the first-author review award once per academic year. To qualify for the $250 award, you must:

- Be a full-time Immunology program student in good academic standing
- Publish a first-author review article where the student contributed greater than 50% of the writing
- Journals must have impact factor of 5.0 or higher

Application

Students are to submit confirmation of a first-author review article publication to the GSBS Immunology program. Please provide the following information for submission: (this information can be provided via email to Ariel Scott)

- Student's name
- Title of the review article
- Where it was published
- When it was published
- A link to the article (if available) or PDF copy
- A letter from the student's PI attesting that the student contributed greater than 50% of the writing

Award Process

Applicants who submit a published first-author review article will have their article reviewed by the Immunology Steering Committee. The Steering Committee will review applications and select award recipients based on the quality and novelty of the publication.

Book chapters will be considered on a case-by-case basis.
